Dennis Hillen, MBA is the Director of Product Development leading the organization's efforts to design, develop, and scale solutions that leverage technology and user-centered design to simplify the experience of healthcare.

Dennis has been with Humana for over 10 years, pioneering the organization's innovation and test and learn culture by establishing Humana's stage-gate investment methodologies, long-term innovation investment thesis, and portfolio management approach. He then went on to lead cross-functional product and platform development functions to bring early stage concepts to market.

Before joining Humana, he successively progressed to the position of Vice President of Finance for an Inc. 100 engineering and construction company. There, in addition to developing the expertise associated with leading the Finance and Technology functions, he cultivated an entrepreneurial spirit developing an appreciation for innovation.

Dennis serves as the Treasurer for Surgery on Sunday Louisville, Inc., a non-profit organization in Louisville, KY that provides surgical care for underinsured and uninsured patients. Dennis has a degree in Finance from the University of Kentucky and an MBA from Indiana University.
